

THE TEMPLE TREASURES

The Temple in Jerusalem was not just a great place to enjoy the presence of Yah, it was the place where all the Jewish gold and silver was kept secure. It was also the Fort Knox of Jerusalem. In it were countless amounts of gold and silver bricks (talents). In today's marketplace these precious minerals would be worth perhaps hundreds of billions of dollars. When the second Temple was destroyed by the Romans in about 70 CE, not only were the most precious treasures in the world stolen from the Temple, but what we would now call hundreds of billions of dollars was also stolen.

The one-piece Menorah was solid gold, weighing around 150 lbs. The Table of Shewbread was solid gold and weighted far more than the menorah. The pure silver trumpets would have been worth a fortune also, along with all the vessels and containers in the holy place.

There have been many theories in regards to what happened to the Temple treasures.

The Romans conquered Jerusalem and pillaged all its valuables in 70 CE. They never managed to find the ark of the covenant but they did steal everything else in the Temple. These most precious treasures in the world (not the gold and silver bullion), were then paraded through Rome and kept on public display for over 300 years in the Roman Peace church. Money from the Temple was used by the Roman Catholics to purchase land throughout Rome and many other parts of the world. Rome got its greatness from stolen Temple treasures.

The Roman Coliseum held 70,000 people. It was the largest in the world by far. It was built with the money stolen from the Temple in Jerusalem. It took about eight years to complete the structure. It was built by thousands of the Jews that were taken when the Temple was destroyed. The Jewish people were slaves that built that wonder of the world with money stolen from their own Temple.

Then in 436 CE the Germanic Barbarians came up the Tiber River and took Rome by surprise. They pillaged it from one end to the other for 14 days before leaving to Carthage in North Africa. According to one theory, as the Temple treasures were being shipped on a boat some Roman soldiers managed to throw them overboard into the Tiber River. The Roman Empire crashed at the end of the 4th century. Years later the Vatican sent men to dredge the Tiber River and they located them and took them back to Rome, where there were hidden in the caves beneath the Vatican. For many years various Israeli leaders and politicians have been trying to get access into the caves of the Vatican because they believe all the Temple treasures are hidden there. The Vatican has denied all inquiries to search the caves beneath the Vatican proper.

A famous historian from about 1400 years ago by the name of Procopius told in his accounts the following: Procopius said that the Barbarians sailed from Sicily to North Africa with the gold and silver treasure.

In 533 CE the Barbarian Emperor Justinian attacked the city of Carthage in North Africa and took the treasures to Constantinople (modern Istanbul and Turkey).

Justinian noted that Jerusalem, Rome, and Carthage were all destroyed because of the Temple treasures so he had the treasures sent back to a newly constructed Christian complex in Jerusalem called "The Church Of Nea". The Church Of Nea was a huge complex which included a huge church, hospital, hospices, and many homes for the workers. It was a huge complex that included spectacular underground cisterns for collecting water. These cisterns still exist today hidden under the old Jewish Quarter in Jerusalem.

In 638 CE the Arab Muslims lead by Caliph Umar, conquered Jerusalem and tore apart the Complex at Nea looking for the Temple treasures, to no avail. Then then used the huge stones of the church to build the muslim palace on the temple mount.

Many people think that Justinian sent the treasures to the proclaimed holiest place on earth for the last 1700 years, the Church Of The Holy Sepulchre, but this has never been verified even though the place has been searched for many years. In fact the Knights Templar during the Crusades went through the Church Of The Holy Sepulchre with a fine tooth comb and found nothing whatsoever.

To this day, no one knows exactly where these buried treasures are. They are said to be under the foundations of what is now called the southern end of the Old City.

There is no doubt though that the Roman Catholic Vatican was able to become the huge Empire it is to this day from the stolen treasures of the Jewish people of old. It used the Second Temple treasures of gold and silver to become the satanic monster it is to this very day.
